Frequently Asked Questions

- Why do you have this extra installation step?
IE Tab uses the Internet Explorer rendering engine. This rendering engine can't be directly accessed from a Chrome extension, so we need a helper process to talk between the Ch
- Did IE Tab always require this extra step?
No. Chrome used to support a technology called NPAPI (the Netscape Plugin API) which allowed extensions to access local computer resources. IE Tab used to use that functional separate helper executable. From a technical standpoint, the only real change is that our code moved from an NPAPI DLL file to a helper EXE file.
- Is it safe?
Absolutely! IE Tab has always used native code, and we have always treated the security of our 2+ million users very seriously. So you can rest assured that this helper executable
- Why do you require this when other solutions do not?
Some versions of Chrome may still support NPAPI, and other products may still be using it. But they won't work for long because Chrome is removing that functionality, as you can s completely. We recommend you stick with the up-to-date product (IE Tab) and not risk using an old product that will have compatibility problems and may have security issues that
